DEAR COLLECTOR...

In this issue, as we roll into autumn and say goodbye to summer for another year, we take a look at people and events that have shaped Ireland over the years.

Ireland's rich biodiversity is celebrated on page 6. Two stamps from Phase One of the Irish Animals and Marine Life Seventh Definitive series are now available on a coil.

On page 8 we celebrate the centenary of the birth of Irish novelist Brian O'Nolan, who became famous as much for his use of pseudonyms as for his satirical take on Irish life.

On page 10, you'll find many Christmas traditions and three stamps that celebrate Christmas.

We also go back in time to the very first broadcast of RTÉ – which will be fifty years old this New Year's Eve. You can read all about those celebrations, how life changed with the introduction of TV and the stamps we've launched to commemorate this event on page 12.

You can read all about two of the most valuable stamps around on page 16, that hail from the small, sunny island of Mauritius.

Don't forget to check out Last Chance Saloon for the chance to get your hands on any of the stamps that you may have missed out on over the year.

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL

“ Amnesty International is a worldwide movement with close to three million members in over 150 countries worldwide. ”

On 30 June, two former death row prisoners, Peter Pringle and Sunny Jacobs, unveiled the new 55c stamp at the GPO. They encouraged Irish people of all ages to support Amnesty International's campaign to end the death penalty, saying: "Something as simple and as powerful as writing a letter can help save a life. It can give hope to the forgotten prisoners, men and women held in jails and torture chambers around the world".

Amnesty International is a worldwide movement with close to three million members in over 150 countries worldwide. It tirelessly campaigns for internationally recognised human rights for all, regardless of political or religious affiliations and was founded on May 28, 1961, by British lawyer, Peter Beneson. In 1962, the Irish section of Amnesty International was launched and currently has 15,000 members.

After spending 17 years on death row in the United States, Sunny Jacob's conviction was overturned and in 1992, she was released.

Peter Pringle was convicted in 1980 and released 15 years later after his conviction too, was overturned.

Colm O'Gorman, executive director of Amnesty International Ireland said: "For our anniversary year, we're urging people to help make Europe a death penalty free zone. Belarus is the last European country that carries out executions and by sending a letter today you can help stamp out the death penalty."

The stamp which was created by Zinc Design features the Amnesty International logo comprising of barbed wire, representing oppression and a burning candle evoking hope.

The stamp may be purchased at www.irishstamps.ie, at the GPO, Dublin, main Post Offices or by phone at (01) 705 7400.

INTRODUCTION OF IRISH ANIMALS AND MARINE LIFE STAMP COIL

“ Here in Ireland, we have a remarkably rich biodiversity for such a small island. ”

As an island, our biodiversity is a unique and delicate balance that has taken thousands, if not millions of years to create. That's why, it's essential to protect and maintain our biodiversity as much as possible, for it is only through such a richness of life on Earth that we can survive.

It is often overlooked that animals not only depend on biodiversity for survival, but that we as humans, depend on it just as much. For example, we depend on plants and trees to provide us with oxygen and the plants and trees depend on us to give them the carbon dioxide that they need in order to survive.

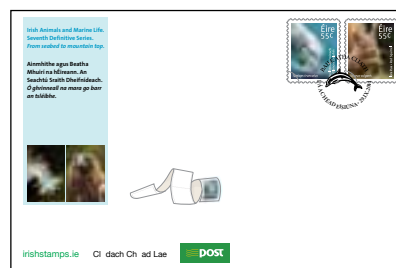

However, protecting Ireland's biodiversity is easier said than done. Thanks to the massive amounts of new properties and roads that were constructed in recent years, many habitats of plants and animals were destroyed and with them, the rich biodiversity on which we all depend.

In 2002 Ireland's National Biodiversity Plan was unveiled. It requires local authorities and government departments to make local biodiversity action plans to ensure that our biodiversity is protected at all costs. After all, it is up to all of us to ensure that our biodiversity not only remains intact but also thrives for future generations to enjoy and benefit from in the years to come.

CENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF BRIAN O'NOLAN "FLANN O'BRIEN"

“ He simply created the many pseudonyms under which he would eventually become famous. ”

Brian O'Nolan was a famous Irish novelist. Known and loved for his satirist style, he wrote under a number of pseudonyms, the most notable of which was Flann O'Brien.

O'Nolan was born on 5 October, 1911 in Strabane, Co. Tyrone. However, he spent most of his life in Dublin, attending University College Dublin, where he became active in the Literary and Historical Society and contributed to the student magazine Comhthrom Féinne.

In 1935, he entered the Civil Service, becoming a Private Secretary to the Minister for Local Government and later a Principal Officer for town planning. Ireland was in the grips of poverty at the time, so a job as a civil servant was considered both prestigious and financially secure. This was just as well, given that his father died suddenly from a massive stroke, leaving O'Nolan to provide for his ten siblings and their mother, practically by himself.

The Irish civil service of the time was strictly apolitical, meaning employees were prohibited from publicly expressing political views. Unperturbed, O'Nolan continued to pursue his love of writing. He simply created the many pseudonyms under which he would eventually become famous.

For over thirty years, 'Myles na gCopaleen' wrote The Irish Times column 'Cruiskeen Lawn', a satirical take on Irish life. As testament to his character, allegations abound that he often wrote - under another pseudonym of course - into the Irish Times complaining about his very own column, which he himself had written. However, the truth of these allegations remains to be discovered to this day.

In 1939, 'Flann O'Brien' published his first, and most popular, novel 'At Swim - Two - Birds'. It was highly acclaimed and was followed by works including 'The Poor Mouth', 'The Dalkey Archive' and 'The Third Policeman', the popularity of which rose recently after its association with the TV show LOST. 'At Swim - Two - Birds' is currently being made into a film, directed by and starring, the famous Irish actor Brendan Gleeson.

O'Nolan passed away on April 1 1966. Given his propensity for acquiring pseudonyms, and his relationship with satire, an exact bibliography of his writings is hard to establish. Nonetheless, the work of 'Flann O'Brien' remains popular to this day. To mark the centenary of the birth of Brian O'Nolan, Steve Simpson has designed a stamp featuring a painting of the writer by his brother Micheál Ó Nualláin.

CHRISTMAS 2011

“Candles continued to be placed on Christmas trees for more than two centuries.”

Whether you're a fan of the real thing or prefer the ease of an artificial one, the tradition of placing a tree in your home at Christmas is centuries old. It became common in Germany during the 1500s, where they were decorated with everything from fruit and nuts to paper flowers and even burning candles. Christmas lights and tinsel have stood the test of time as well and continue to make it onto modern trees worldwide.

Coming from the French word for 'sparkle', tinsel was also created by the Germans around the 16th century. Originally formed from strips of silver, it was used to both make their trees more interesting and reflect the flickering of the candles that adorned them.

Candles continued to be placed on Christmas trees for more than two centuries until electric lights became known. London's Savoy Theatre became the first building in the world to be lit entirely by electricity in 1881, it was decorated by over a thousand 'fairy lights'. This quickly caught on in British homes and spread to the United States when then President Cleveland put an electrically lit Christmas tree in the White House.

This festive season there are three stamps celebrating Christmas. Two of them are

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FIRST RTÉ BROADCAST

“ On New Year's Eve, the much - anticipated broadcast of the new Irish television service began. ”

Radio Telefís Éireann (RTÉ) is the public service broadcaster of Ireland and one of the oldest continuously operating public service broadcasters in the world. While the radio service began in 1926, regular television broadcasts began in style on 31 December 1961.

On New Year's Eve, the much - anticipated broadcast of the new Irish television service began. The first person to address the captivated television audience was Éamon de Valera. The President's speech reflected the uncertainty amongst his people as to what this new medium might bring. He admitted to feeling “somewhat afraid” and likened the power of television to that of atomic energy, which could be “used for incalculable good but can also do irreparable harm”.

Once the formalities of the evening – an address from An Taoiseach, Seán Lemass and a benediction of the blessed sacrament by the Archbishop of Dublin – were completed, the celebrations really got under way.

Footage was aired of the famous visit to Ireland by the hugely popular Prince Rainier and Princess Grace of Monaco. It included images of the thousands who turned out to see the former Hollywood star and her husband. The first ever news bulletin followed, read by Charles Mitchel, since established as Ireland's most recognised newscaster.

The celebrations continued with poetry reading, music and songs from guests including Maureen Potter. However, the highlight of the night was an audacious live broadcast from the Gresham Hotel in Dublin. Cameras captured the lucky VIPs invited to dine and dance in the magnificent ballroom and also the public who had gathered to dance outside on O'Connell Street despite the heavy snow. The historic night was brought to a close by Eamonn Andrews, a man who would go on to become one of Ireland's most popular presenters.

To celebrate the 50th Anniversary of the first broadcasts of RTE, Ger Garland has designed three stamps featuring TVs and a hand - held device, which evoke a sense of the Past, Present and Future. On the screens are iconic images of The Late Late Show host Gay Byrne, children's TV presenter, Emma O'Driscoll, on the set of Hubble and renowned newsreader, Anne Doyle.

MAURITIUS POST OFFICE STAMPS

Billed as two of the rarest stamps in the world, these Mauritius “Post Office” stamps were first introduced in September 1847, by the British Colony in Mauritius. Produced in two denominations – an orange - red one penny and a deep blue two pence, their name comes from the fact that the first ones issued had the words “Post Office” on them. In the next issue however, those words became “Post Paid” and it was this small change in letters that led to their renowned reputation in the philatelic world.

In 1838, a young British stowaway called Joseph Osmond Barnard arrived on the island of Mauritius. Barnard was an engraver and the Mauritius “Post Office” stamps were to become his legacy. Both stamps, which he engraved, bear the profile head of Queen Victoria. Five hundred of each value were printed and issued on September 21, 1847. Many of them were then used on invitations sent out by the wife of the Governor of Mauritius for a ball she was holding that weekend. The stamps were printed using the intaglio method (recessed printing) and bear Barnard’s initials “JB” at the lower right margin of the bust.

The words “Post Office” appear in the left panel, but on the following issue in 1848, these words were replaced by “Post Paid.” A legend later arose that the words “Post Office” had been an error and many tales were recounted of why exactly the mistake had been made. In fact, all of these stories have proven to be false. There was no error, Barnard simply engraved the words “Post Office” in the first issues of the stamps because it was the legal denomination of the government department concerned.

The stamps first came to the attention of the philatelic world in 1864 when a Madame Borchard found copies of the stamps in her husband’s correspondence. They then proceeded to pass between dealers and eventually found their way into the hands of famous stamp collector Phillip Von Ferrary who sold them at an auction in 1921.

Down through the years, the stamps have sold for increasingly large sums with one of the most famous of all the Mauritius stamps, the ‘Bordeaux Cover’ which shows unused copies of both the One Penny and the Two Pence “Post Office” stamps, fetching approximately $4 million dollars at an auction in 1993.

It is generally agreed that only fifteen examples of the One Penny have survived (including two unused) and twelve of the Two Pence (including four unused) to this day. You can view these two rarest of stamps in places such as the Blue Penny Museum in Mauritius or a little closer to home in the British Library in London.

Letters, Lives & Liberty

Letters, Lives and Liberty opens the new An Post Museum in Dublin's GPO. Situated just off the Public Office, the exhibition explores the influence of the Post Office in Ireland and offers an insight into the role played by Post Office people in the development of Irish society over many years. From stamps and stamp collecting to An Post's copy of the 1916 Proclamation and the little-known story of the staff who were actually in the GPO on Easter Monday, the exhibition is a unique way to learn about the importance of the Post Office in Irish life.
